The Zabriskie Mansion A House in which the Marquis de La Favette was Enter-tained-Another Landmark Going.

The old house at the southwest corner of Greenwich and Watts streets, for a long time occupied as a grocery, was once a conspicuous landmark in New York city. It is now about being transformed into a modern building. The use was built in 1810 by George Zabriskie, who bouse was built in 1810 by George Zabriskie, who was in 1822 and 1823 an Alderman of the city, and in 1825, 1837, and for three years thereafter a member of the Assembly. When this house was built it was one of the great mansions on the west side, somewhat out of town, to be sire, but still near enough to civilization to be reached by the stage, which piled daily between the city and Greenwich village. The region in which the old house stands was then to the west side what Murray Hill is to the east now. It was the quarter where many of the solid business men of the city resided, and was rich in orchards and beautiful gardens, and to this faubourg the Sunday strollers resorted, and over its smooth roads the young gallants liked to ejercise their horses.

orchards and beautiful gardens, and to this faubourg the Sunday strollers resorted, and over its smooth roads the young gallants liked to exercise their horses.

When the Zabriskie house was built the splendid mansions on the Battery and many in Pearl and Church and other down-town streets were centres of old-fashioned hospitality. The old Walton house, now the abode of poverty, was then a palace; Tryon row sheltered happy families; Bleecker and Bond and Great Jones streets were fashionable out-of-town thorough-fares; there was no Central Park, no Croton aqueduct, no Astor House; boys hunted frogs on Canal street, what we know as Eighth avenue was a swamp, the great hotel was the Washington House at the foot of Broadway, and where the Flifth Avenue Hotel stands was a kitchen garden belonging to a family who owned all the land between Fifth and Seventh avenues, and between Eighteenth and Twenty-seventh streets. There was no such thing as a street passenger car, no elevated railway, no rapid transit scheme. There was no gas in use, and the people drew their supplies of water from public pumps. Three or four of these pumps were in existence in 1871, at the time when the city pay rolls bore the names of twenty-two pump inspectors who received $3 a day for their services. The honest burghers had then no dream of a new County Court House, nor of a colossal Post Office building, nor of a bridge to Brooklyn, nor of one in a hundred of the improvements which time and man's necessities have since rendered essential.

In 1824, a short time after the arrival of the Marquis de la Favette, the distinguished visitor was entertained in sumptions style at the Zabriske mansion, the Alderman and his family being among the first to do honor to the friend of the young republic on his arrival. The occasion was one of great interest at the time, and was the town topic for weeks afterward.

The owner of the old mansion does not intend to destroy it, but will be able to point it out as one of the few interesting relics of the early day
